Essay Question:

Social media has become an increasingly important part of our day-to-day lives. Whether the attention is on Facebook, Twitter, YouTube, or other forms of media such as Instagram and LinkedIn, social media is deeply integrated into our society and it is changing the face of many institutions including politics and medicine. Given the numerous innovations in social media that have occurred over the last decade, it is quite possible that these same technologies can be used to reshape how we think about criminal justice. For this essay, you are asked to write about the potential integration of social media into the field of criminal justice. Is the field of criminal justice, by nature, resistant to the changes that we see taking place in other fields such as marketing, public relations, and even the health industry?
